Dear [name],

This is the ENYGMA letterhead. The frame is set. Everything below the rule is yours. Replace this paragraph and the two under it, and leave the spacing alone: the measure is set to about seventy characters because that is where a line stops being comfortable to read.

Hierarchy here comes from weight and space rather than from colour. If a sentence needs to stand out, give it its own paragraph rather than a different shade. There is no accent colour to reach for, which is the point: nothing in this system competes with what you are actually saying.

The block on the right carries whatever the letter needs to be found by later. If a field does not apply, delete the whole line rather than leaving it empty, so the alignment stays true.

Yours,

[Your name]
